They rated 15 services, 3 as outstanding, 11 as good and one as requires improvement. Published on: 7 April 2020 Communications team: Image caption, The Care Ouality Commission raised concerns about safeguarding and waiting times in the emergency care department has been told it must improve. Inspectors also found A&E patients at Rotherham General Hospital in 2018 it required improvement and said that remained the case after its inspection this summer. Rotherham NHS Foundation Trust said it was working "to improve patient care". The CQC said the inspection carried out in May and June was a follow-up to an inspection in 2018 which raised concerns "around the quality of care being provided to patients". The report said: "Although the team had made some improvements since our last visit, it was not enough to make an impact on the overall trust rating which remains as requires improvement."Inspectors found "performance issues in urgent and emergency care which resulted in long waiting more than 10 hours. The report also highlighted concerns about "inadequate processes" around safeguarding" in the emergency unit "that may put people at risk of avoidable harm". The finalists for the 2018 HSJ Awards have been announced. The awards are one of the largest celebrations of healthcare excellence in the world, recognising and promoting the finest achievements in the NHS, and showcasing them to the service's most influential leaders. The CQC said the issue had been raised in previous inspections and that the trust "must address it as a matter of urgency". The shortlisting process has included an additional stage of checks and balances compared to previous years, and all 1,500 entrants will receive written feedback on their submissions. Our Solution. HSJ editor Alastair McLellan said: "In this historic year for the NHS we were inundated with applications demonstrating continued determination to deliver first class healthcare, harnessing the latest innovations while ensuring value for money. "The HSJ Awards continue to be the gold standard awards programme in healthcare, giving a boost to teams and organisations through improved morale and assisting with efforts to secure support for projects. The quality was of such a level that we took the unprecedented decision to regionalise two of the categories to ensure due recognition. As a result of its latest inspection, the CQC found Pennine Acute Trust, has: maintained its Good ratings for being Caring and Well-led improved its rating for Effective services from Requires Improvement to Good improved the overall rating for Fairfield General Hospital to Outstanding rated community health inpatient services as Outstanding rated the Trust's End of life Palliative Care services (incl. "During this inspection") we looked at the areas identified in the warning notice, and found some areas had improved," it said. "However, there were still staff vacancies and gaps in the rota, especially during the night which could put patients at risk." Inspectors praised some discharging patients. The trust said in response to the report it had "compiled action plans which our teams are working through in order to improve patient care and experience". Fairfield General Hospital and the Trust's End of Life Care are rated Outstanding. Winners will be revealed at a ceremony at the Intercontinental London hotel on 21 November. "Patients didn't always have a dignified experience when they were being moved from one place to another within the hospital," the inspectors said."We saw one patient being transferred without any trousers on and no alternative covering which is totally unacceptable."The report added that last November the trust was issued with a warning notice in medical care where there were not enough suitably skilled and competent staff to meet patients' needs. The Trust was previously known as de Poel health+care). Follow BBC Yorkshire on Facebook, Twitter and Instagram. Each winner serves as an inspiration to organisations up and down the country, spurring teams to improve and adapt best practices." To register for the 2018 HSJ Awards, click here.
